

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

923,568

VERSES

WILSON JEFFERSON

8281 20

J4/557

VERSES

WILSON JEFFERSON

BOSTON
RICHARD G. BADGER
THE GORHAM PRESS
1909

Copyright 1909 by Wilson Jefferson

All Rights Reserved

THE GORHAM PRESS, BOSTON, U. S. A.

CONTENTS

	PAGE.
A Memory	5
Should I Despair	6
The Clod Speaks	7
Night Workers' Song	8
Dead River	9
The Workers	10
The Builders	11
Dreams	12
The Gift Possessed	13
Journey's End	14
After Death	15
The Wife	16
Pioneers	17
The Vine	18
A Song of May	20
To a Book Peddler	21
For Lo! He Stooped and Sighed	22
Thought	23
 Sonnets of Remembrance—
Lincoln	24
Garrison	25
John Brown	26

CONTENTS

	PAGE.
The Secret	27
Militant	27
To Miss S. D.	28
The Soul That Surpasses	29
America	30

A MEMORY

A rich rare grace green fields o'erspread—
Bird notes rang clear—the dew
Sun-kissed at morn threw back the charms
Given to earth by you.
On those first days we braved the maze
Of life's old things and new.

Earth, air and sky bent to our wills
And moved in unison
With all the present's store of bliss
And all yet to be won:
Then the heart's beat and striving feet
Heeded life's call as one.

The low dull hum of deadening things
Reached not our fair demesne,
Dwellers of earth we lived apart
In a fair world serene,
Where cares like swift sea-seeking streams
Love's fingers slipped between.

SHOULD I DESPAIR?

Should I despair because my lot on earth
Is bound and meted by the chance of birth?
Should I despair because earth's vested power
Demons can wield for one brief soulless hour?
Should I, forsooth, allow the monster, Hate,
In me to rise and stain my soul's estate?—
And grieve if knowledge all its powers use
Distrust to kindle and to nurse abuse?
Know thou, my soul, a vaster kingdom lies
Beyond this rim of meeting earth and skies,
And here and now the guileless heart can feel
The power that shapes a godly people's weal,—
The Presence that, unseen, still shapes the end
Of those who, claiming strength, on God depend,
And, owning weakness, place their hope and trust
In him whose banner ne'er yet trailed the dust.

THE CLOD SPEAKS

In kindred, groveling dust I lie,—
A part of earth, to earth I cling,—
Yet kin I am to stars on high,
And man I give meet nourishing.

The rich, the poor, proud king or clown,
Are for a day my betters all;
Yet the same feet that press me down
Press onward till beneath my thrall.

Though all things bloom to fade, I boast
The primal strength I knew of old,—
And new strength gain, as all earth's host,
Or soon, or late, I shall infold.

As men know death I know it not,— Both man and nature I defy,—
Systems and powers will be forgot
And perished all—ere I shall die!

NIGHT WORKER'S SONG

We seize the tangled skein of things
When tired hands are folded by,
And night to our unraveling brings
The glory of the star-set sky.

Day with its garish charms departs
And dark, gem-studded, rims our world;
And peace all-healing seeks our hearts
From night's dim, star-strewn spaces hurled.

Moonlight and mist and silence weave
A calm that soothes the wearied brain;
The round, full earth may sob and heave,
But we know not its pulse and strain.

We lightly drift from cares along
Earth's planet-whirling, distant way,
And hear the fabled heavenly song
From hights where no earth-interests stray.

“DEAD RIVER”

[A local legend tells of a woman who fruitlessly waited the return of a truant and faithless lover, and finally, bereft of reason, drowned herself in the waters of this river. It was then a part of the main stream of the Savannah, but thereafter the river gradually changed its course and left this sleeping calm.]

Its waters, quiet, cool and dim,
E'er keep a strange devotion,—
Even the oaks and poplars slim
About it show no motion;
Placid its bosom lies and weirdly still
To streams that pierce the plain or leap the hill.

Its face by day reflects a sun
Soft-lying and at rest
Like to an infant lulled upon
Its mother's tender breast.
By night it woos the glancing vagrant star
With charms as rare as any maiden's are.

U of M

Strangely it keeps a hallowed peace
Amid the world's wild roving,
And from the thrall seeks no release
Of one once madly loving;
Strangely it shows that constancy and love
One heart defiled and one heart died to prove.

THE WORKERS

Toil-seeking, yet with morn's glow in their faces,
By sleep and dreams renewed, they haste
along;
Dark roofs that hide from them life's sunlit places
Await them, yet they go, a joyous throng!
But passed the long dull day I see again
Homebound, the weary, shambling haste of those
Who joyous saw morn's golden amber stain
Poured round the sky when daylight first arose.

1910

THE BUILDERS

Through labyrinths of crossing beams
Bold, crafty figures sunward glide,
And toil serene where virgin gleams
Of daylight fall their way beside.

Yonder on frail, scant scaffoldings
A bit of pulsing life looks down,
And higher still a figure swings
Between the flaring sun and town.

Like a new tribe or species sprung
To serve the gods of Use and Space,
Some kindly spirit hither flung
Yon hardy, nimble-footed race,

And solved for each the mystery
Of all that doth far planets bind,
Wherewith to rear strong walls to be
A hive for teeming humankind.

DREAMS

I reared a dream-spun fabric to the sky,
Woven of all the glorious thrills of youth;
Like threads of silver, life's bold hopes and high
Ran through fair threads of golden-promised truth.

Then one by one came earth's disasters swift—
Rough winds to shake and mists to hide its gleaming—
Till scattered wide its shattered fragments drift
Earthward, but I to other ports of dreaming.

THE GIFT POSSESSED

To a Caged Bird

Thy home, gay songster, is the free
Far leagues of space's immensity—
 Dim woods and quiet, leafy bowers;
Yet from thy prison small and bare
Thy soul, forgetting bounds, doth fare
 In strains that shame man's cruel powers.

Wings hast thou, and the instinctive sense
That, free, thou couldst pierce the immense
 Far stretches of a luring sky;
And yet, forbidden, thou thy wings
Foldest, while from thy heart upsprings
 Sweet strains thy lot to glorify.

O bird! would that my heart, like thine
Earth-bound, could still feel the divine
 Sweet issues of the gift of life—
And should to me heaven aught deny,
Would that I still might glorify
 The gift possessed—come calm or strife.

JOURNEY'S END

I have felt the lures of earth,
Sun-flecked road and heaving tide;
But the place that knew my birth
I would seek now, to abide.

Through life's noon-time splendor, I
Roamed and felt the world's wild call;
Give me now a glimpse of sky
Here where peace is over all.

Once earth's bounds to me seemed nearer,
And my joys sprang from the road;
Now yon hearthside calling clearer,
Rest would give me and my load.

AFTER DEATH

And for his passage

The soldier's music, and the rites of war

Speak loudly for him.—Hamlet.

“The soldier's music, and the rites of war”—

Aye, for his passing fain we grant him these,

Who reaped in life heart-pang and jeer and scar,

While men, unknowing, reaped his victories.

In life men pitied,—but his faith was bold;

Men counseled, but he strove in his own way;

Men balked him, but the truth his heart did hold

Triumphed, and heaven, somehow, earth's debt will pay.

THE WIFE

I glory when earth's honors come to thee;
I sorrow when thy cherished plans go wrong;
Attuned to thine, my heart beats weak or strong,

And naught thou reapest but what yields to me:

Yet often more than what the world doth see
Of good or ill I bear with joy or tears;
My poor heart quails ofttimes, and yet o'er fears

I shrink from, thou, through me, hold'st mastery.

Deep in my soul thou knowest I little care
For things prized dearly by the throbbing world;

For thy approval all earth's gifts I'd spare,—
Nay, count naught lost if Love his flag unfurled

O'er the strewn wrecks of all our earthly gain,

And left thy heart and mine without a stain.

PIONEERS

Across the prairies wild a cavalcade
Winds its slow way—or hugs the mountainside

'Neath frowning cliffs, and where stretch
chasms wide:

Where the deep canon throws its death-like shade

They penetrate. Naught leaves their hearts dismayed.

One pulsing hope urges the restless tide
Out where God's mighty stillnesses abide,
And the West smiles!—as yet by man unmade.

On, on they move, defying death and all
The sombre train of earth's calamities;
The fire that glows within, nor home, nor ties

Of friends or kin could quench, nor aught
enthrall

The spirit bold that urged them stake life's best

For all the storied splendor of the West.

THE VINE

This thing I saw about a common vine
That sprang from common soil;
Following the nature of its parent stock
That earth and air and sun
Had wakened, coaxed and urged
To full free life,—
High in the air its tendrils reached,
Like a thing of sense.
But not so seeming good or kind,—
So smiling like, is earth always;
Rains pelted and winds tossed
Its stem about. Heat and cold,
Following too closely,
Dwarfed it. Careless feet
Twice pressed it down.
"Surely," said I, "'twill never reach
A coign of support."

But one brave tendril, all undaunted, won
My sympathy as up it strove
Above its fellows.
It reached to clasp a neighboring bush,—
Through a long day toiled painfully,—
And failed.

Then, not discouraged, on the next
It reached again,
And groped and sighed,
And spent itself,—
Its goal still bafflingly remote.
Then through succeeding days
It likewise toiled,
Sorrowing it seemed that fate its life
Had doomed to unfulfilment.

Days passed and I the vine forgot.
So near to failure did the issue seem,
That I confused and all uncertain,—
For thoughts of failure often bring
Regrets that blur sad issues out,—
Forbade my thoughts thereon to dwell.
And then by chance my eyes one day
The erstwhile trailing tendril caught,
And lo! it had its haven reached,—
Had drooped and sighed, no doubt, and moaned,
But still itself about itself
Had twined;
Had reached and drooped
And twined again,
And still again,
Till its own body gave it strength
And stoutness to reach out and clasp
The neighboring bush.

And there it grew,
Twisted about itself and curled
And all unshapely,—
Its symmetry and grace all lost,—
But earth and the untowardness of things
Spurned, and new glory given
To faith sublime in self!

A SONG OF MAY

My soul, look thou beyond the gloom
Of sorrows strewn between
The short-lived joys of yesteryear,
To where in rolling grace appear
Yon billows of soft green,—

And know a thousand thousand hopes
Rise daily with the sun,—
While life, like earth's unfolding, brings
New gifts of cheer, and glimmerings
Of joys yet to be won.

TO A BOOK PEDDLER

Meek, cheerful, hopeful, upward looking man!

Thy task is one unlovely, and thy lot
Not to be envied, yet withal thou art
Man's benefactor, counselor and friend.
The world its back turns on thee in disdain
And dubs thee nuisance, trifler, and the like,— Makes thee the butt of coarse, unfeeling jokes,—

Impatient leaves thee and thy wares, nor heeds

Thy piteous appeals. But these are they
Who need the kindly pitying prayer and tear—

Despairing ones who've never known or felt
The sweet delights of books. Black ignorance
Encircles them. Their faculties are doomed
To move in one worn groove of empty thought.

They see just to their finger tips, nor wish
Further to scan.

Ignore their frowns and jeers;
Pass by their cold refusals and the smile
That leers, and ply thy trade for us who wish
Broad fields of wisdom and of wit to roam—
Who would o'erstep the narrow bounds of time
And circumstance, and fondly contemplate
Thought ages old and wide experience
Flowered into feeling poetry or prose.

FOR LO! HE STOOPED AND SIGHED"

We are poorer since she died—
Sadder, poorer, since she died,
Yet sure I am that Death
Gazed and turned a worshipper:
For lo! he stooped and sighed,
Stooped and eased the pain-drawn breath,
And laid, in tenderest love, his hands on her.

THOUGHT

Weak and unavailing thought is, if it's warmed
ed not by the heart:
Deeds born of it lack the fire that divorces
deed from doer;
Words born of it lack the essence that another heart would cherish;
All things born of it are short-lived, empty,
vain, and unavailing.

SONNETS OF REMEMBRANCE

I

LINCOLN

Beside thy greatness, O most noble man!
Speech seems a vapor striving with the sun;
And all our far-fetched figures vainly run
A gamut metaphoric, when the plan
Of thy rich wisdom they would wisely scan.
Our similes and tropes in love begun
Strive at high tasks, but ere a victory won Acknowledge that our love all thought out-ran.

And yet, to venture, thou art like a tree
That doth in some dank forest side up-spring,
Stalwart and bold, a beacon of the glade,
Whose limbs far-spreading tell of liberty—
Giving support to lesser things that cling,
To rivals of its greatness offering shade.

II

GARRISON

A later knowledge man has somehow gained—

A knowledge born, they say, of wisdom rare—

That honors means, not ends, and doth prepare

To cancel griefs and wrongs that long have pained

With sore afflictions, as by heaven ordained—

Not rashly, as they say, but biding time

And circumstance, till man and goodness chime

And all the boons of love flourish unfeigned.

But thou, O Father, knowest of his heart

Who stirred at wrongs, impatient as the wind

Sweeping the level fields of bending grain;

Who evil saw and nobly did his part;

Left friends and foes and dalliers all behind,

And strove to bring to earth thy love again.

III

JOHN BROWN

God fired his soul with purposes of right,
Gave it a dauntless daring glow, and gave
Its owner faith, that armor of the brave
Who heeded the heart's appeal against man's might,—

And then with boldness flamed he on the sight
Of men and weaklings, like a star far-flashed

Across the waiting dark, leaving abashed,
In rich effulgence, those of lesser light.

Even now his courage glows across the years
Of servile thought confused and faith grown cold

With no uncertain glimmer; as of old
It stirred the heart through self-forgetting tears—

It still condemns the part that reason plays
O'er hearts unreasoning and degenerate days.

THE SECRET

Life's best for self I'd win, and yet
I'd spare another pain;
The boons of life I seek, but set
My soul on righteous gain.

And so I teach my striving heart
A noble way to live;
I always find life's sweeter part
Left when the best I give.

MILITANT

I strive with fervor, yet my heart
Accepts earth's sure decree
Whereby I only gain in part
The all that I would be;

But 'gainst the dull effects of things
That bid me less desire—
Life, steel me with the faith that brings
Thy unrelenting fire.

TO MISS S. D.

Having Attained Her Majority

A child thou wert the embodiment
Of winsome wiles and graces,
A radiant, flower-like presence sent
To cheer earth's lonely places,
A breath of morning's sweetness blown
About a world with weeds o'ergrown.

All that those early years foretold
Time fitly now discloses,
Of the soul's promise of pure gold
And cheeks to bloom like roses;
For childhood's charm still round thee lingers
Dulled not nor marred by time's rough fingers.

THE SOUL THAT SURPASSES

I grieve not that my hands are bound
To dull tasks, and my feet must go
Ofttimes the care-encumbered round
Weak, struggling mortals know;

My heart can spurn the strife and noise
Of warring things that round me rage,—
For out of love's far deeps come joys
Earth's sorrows to assuage.

My weak earth-humbled flesh can creep
Awhile past life's despoiling things,—
And my bold soul can rise and sweep
Past earth's mean offerings,—

Where all the pangs of grief I've known,
And all the cares that burdened me,
Shall drift like leaves by wild winds blown
From the storm-beaten tree.

AMERICA

Fit theme art thou for prophet, poet, seer,—
America, home of earth's far-straying tribes!
Nature has flowered in thee, through men
and things,

And bold high purposes, full many a wish
Long cherished by the nations older grown.
Thy youth with many a garland rich and rare,
Such as become the ripened age, is decked;
And thou a host of glorious memories hast,
Rich with a store of honors nobly won
From noble causes fathered by the sons
Who nurtured at thy bosom; richer still
In inspiration to the advancing lines
Of newer sons, upon whose shoulders rest
The fashioning of the state the fathers dreamed,

Whose base is brotherhood, whose fabric is
Of love and tolerance and faith compact.
And 'tis with these thy future weal doth lie!
Into their keeping all thy dearest boons
Are fondly given—and unto them thy past
Makes its appeal: Lincoln and Washington,
And Garrison, outspoken for mankind,—
Whittier the gentle, and high-starred John Brown,—

And many another unknown patriot gave
Thy institutions goodly scope and power—
Relinquished for mankind the narrow ties
That bound them to a selfish gain, and spent
Life to its uttermost for thy advance.

And yet the power that's now thy pride can be,
If loosed to passion's base appeals, or used
For the mere ends of gain, the potent means
Of thy undoing; while the unfeigned joy
Thou hast in brave, red-blooded, daring men
And projects vast, may blindly lead thee on Past yonder humble, godly one who strives
Far from the prying gaze of men, unknown,
Unhonored, yet with a bold faith that dares
All things for earth's and mankind's good,
 and hopes
For no reward save what his own appeased
Strict conscience grants.

 Thy spires tall may point
Ever in pious passiveness to heaven;
Thy marts may teem with men of trade, thy schools
With seekers after truth—and yet far flown
May be life's higher choice—far driven all
That makes for manhood and the true ideals

